"Playing tennis here has been a unique and unforgettable experience." Said Rafael Nadal Tennis world No. 1 after completing the promotional activity of the natural beauties of Argentina. Nadal and Djokovic pelotearon minipista floating in a court, next to one of the impressive ice walls of Perito Moreno Glacier, Patagonia, Argentina.

A creative way to bring about the global impact through a single action, in which the first two world tennis rackets accepted the invitation of the Argentine Ministry of Tourism for this unusual exhibition.

On board the ship that housed a tennis court tennis players pelotearon small size next to one of the stunning walls of Perito Moreno to promote awareness of its beauty and the need for their care.

By so-called Law of Glaciers, Argentina legally protects glaciers as World Heritage ensuring strategic reserves of water resources for human consumption and agriculture.

Glaciers play a key role in the environmental balance and sustainability of life on the planet as we know it.

With this Act Argentina dedicated financial resources to protect the environment by promoting the study and development of sustainable tourism.

Rafael Nadal has repeatedly supported initiatives aimed at promoting sustainable development and care for the natural environment on planet earth. Now adds to the will of Enrique Meyer, Minister of Tourism of Argentina, in its decision to focus on the natural wonders of the country and the developed infrastructure to welcome visitors from around the world.
