Battersea Park. London. 2 and 3 of July. The double battle that will decide the second champion of the FIA Formula E, happening in the palmarés to the Brazilian Nelsinho Piquet, expects a third protagonist: the rain. Lucas di Grassi leads the pack with a single point advantage over Sebastien Buemi ... with 60 still in play. Both have three victories in the season and the duel for the championship is supposed to be very exciting. However, both the Brazilian and the French seem more pending the weather forecast than his opponent.

"We're going to a circuit that is completely different from all the other tracks we have raced this year. There are many curves, is very narrow, very long and technically is very very difficult to drive there. Besides the unpredictability of the weather in London could play A very important role because the classification is divided into groups randomly falls in which the dispute the qualification in rain could be defining," says the current leader.

Meanwhile, Buemi, who already was runner - up in the first edition of the contest electric cars says. "You might think that the only goal is to finish ahead of Lucas, but we're not just fighting for the drivers ' championship The one Teams are also very important. When we get to London we will practice and qualify ... and look at the weather. " Title in play in Formula E and water as the main concern.
